

That the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone privacy law protections.

--How Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved your time at home.

It has decreased the telemarketing calls. My wife is hard of hearing, and sometime the telemarketer would take advantage of it.

--How effective Indiana's law has been(e.g., "I used to receive 12 calls per week, now I only receive one").

Instead of calling us, they would send us mails which is okay.

--Any of your personal views about the importance of Indiana's law.

My wife would make better choice by shredding all of the information we do not need. There are a very few information we would check out. Over the phone, the telemarketers would assume she said okay when she really meant "No thank, but send me the information through the mail." It would give her the understanding of what they talk about per their telecon. Even more, we would not have to said "No thank!" every time the telemarketers calls us.
